

Static friction

Static friction is a force that operates on surfaces that aren't in motion. For example, when you pull a chair out from the table, you have to overcome static friction to get the chair to move.

When you walk static friction prevents your feet from slipping on the ground allowing you to push forward. Imagine trying to walk on slick ice!