

Volume

Matter takes up space. This is called volume. You can measure the volume of a liquid like water by pouring it into a measuring cup. You can measure the volume of a rectangular solid by measuring the sides and multiplying. One way that scientists measure the volume of a gas is by measuring how much liquid a gas can displace.